Life on the River: The Archaeology of an Ancient Native American Culture

by

Dr. William Hildebrandt

Archaeologist/Author

Far Western Anthropological Research Group

Saturday, December 6, 2008

2:00 to 5:00 p.m.

Vallejo's Restaurant

1100 O Street

Sacramento, CA 95814

This year we are pleased to feature Dr. Hildebrandt co-founder and President of Far Western Anthropological Research Group as our guest lecturer. Dr. Hildebrandt will present and answer questions about an archaeological excavation on which his book, Life on the River is focused. In this detailed account of a dig along the banks of the Upper Sacramento River in Northern California, we gain unforgettable glimpses into the village life of a Wintu tribe 175 years ago, including signs of their often contentious interactions with other groups and evidence of the epidemic that nearly destroyed the tribe in 1833.

With the assistance of several Wintu tribal members and volunteers from throughout the area, archaeologists conducted careful excavations of the site, preserving portions of it from the threat of land development. The investigations of this team yielded a firsthand look at how the Wintu lived prior to the arrival of Europeans in the region-their food, clothing, tools, social structure, burial techniques, and more-as well as their experiences during and following contact. Not only did the site yield rich information on day-to-day village life, but the investigations also led to the dramatic discovery that a malaria epidemic had swept through the area along with some of the earliest European fur traders.

Please join us as local author discusses his new book. Dr. Hildebrandt will sign books that have been purchased in advance of the Annual Meeting presentation. Please join us as local author discusses his new book. Copies are available for sale at the Avid Reader (both in Sacramento and Davis) and through www.heydaybooks.com.

Dr. William Hildebrandt is a California archaeologist with an extensive record of research, cultural resource management, and public service. He is co-founder and President of Far Western Anthropological Research Group, a cultural resource management firm based in Davis, California, with offices in San Luis Obispo and Reno, Nevada. His other research addresses change in human settlement and foraging strategies over time and focuses on gender differences in labor and reproductive strategies through the application of human behavioral ecology to the archaic periods of California and Great Basin prehistory.

In 1978, on windswept plains of northern Afghanistan, archaeologists unearthed tombs of ancient nomads that had been sealed for two thousand years and discovered an extraordinary trove: some 22,000 individual pieces of gold buried with the remains of six Bactrian Central Asian nomads. Within months of this discovery at Tillya Tepe, the country descended into war, and the so-called Bactrian Hoard disappeared into legend once more. Twenty-five years later, in 2003, Afghanistan surprised the world by announcing that the priceless artifacts had been located intact in the presidential palace bank vault in Kabul. They had been rescued, along with other masterpieces of the National Museum, Kabul, and protected in the intervening years of turmoil by a group of selfless Afghan heroes who have come to be known as "the key holders."

Strategically located on the commercial routes between China and India in the east and Europe in the west, Afghanistan was at the crossroads of civilizations in Central Asia. "Afghanistan: Hidden Treasures from the National Museum, Kabul" explores the rich cultural heritage of ancient Afghanistan from the Bronze Age (2500 BCE) through the rise of trade along the Silk Road in the first century CE.

Drawn mainly from three archaeological sites, the exhibition features nearly 230 artworks, including gold objects from the famed Bactrian Hoard, bronze and stone sculptures, ivories, painted glassware, and other ancient Afghan works of art.
